Let me know if you have a direct contact on your team I can point to the Aggies...you would be on the same campus that Army Futures just closed their $80M deal on, so it's a great location for you.

Hello DARPA. In regards to your request for an underground space large enough to conduct experiments in that's tied to a University, I suggest you look at the now defunct LORING AIR FORCE BASE in Limestone, Maine. I was stationed at Loring (before it closed) in the late 80's -90's. It has HUGE tunnels that we used to go from place to place due to the miserable climate conditions of the cold. The base itself one held nukes and nuke "igloos" that are pretty large. It's close to Univ. of Main at Presque Isle. The base is somewhat in the middle of countryland, not too remote as Presque Isle and Limestone are close...but sparsely populated towns. You should do some research on Loring AFB and its tunnels and the area. I think you'd find it to your liking and could help you with experiments.

Good afternoon. I'm an active duty AF Officer and AF Academy graduate. I don't have the authority to grant any permission for this, but the Air Force Academy has an extensive underground tunnel system that includes classrooms, utility systems, a dining facility, hospital, and many other networks. This network is off limits to personnel so is empty, if you can get permission to use it, it may be exactly what you're looking for. I recommend reaching out to the 10th Air Base Wing. They may be able to make this happen. Thought I'd suggest it. (b)(6)

There are abandoned cave systems from a company, NYCO Minerals, in upstate New York in the town of Willsboro. This would be an ideal location as it is near Plattsburgh International Airport. One such cave system is across the road from Ben Weaver Farm up on a mountain. A handful of people know about it, locals know about it - less than a couple thousand people. Composition of the rock is bedrock, granite and other igneous formations making it super tough material. Let me know if this helps.

Actually less than a couple thousand maybe less than 100 people about this one.

There is the old Fulton state Hospital in fulton mo 65251. Lots of underground tunnels that are closed off to public. They used to have a tunneling system all the way to the court house in town. They just built a new state of the art facility and move the patients there. So a huge building with tunnels and a whole hospital on top with like 200 rooms. It was built in 1820 i think and it was comandeared by the military in the civil war. Its still fully standing and usable. Owned by the state of missouri.

The University of South Carolina has some legendary underground tunnels. When I was an undergrad I was interested in "urban exploration" and spent some time trying to get into them, with some luck. Much fun for a few engineering undergrads.

(b)(6)

Sept 2, 2019, 2:48 PM

Some of the tunnels are still used by the university-wide heating/cooling system, others are unused with bricked-up entrances (under Gambrell Hall). There's also an old city-wide "catacomb" like network that's used for stormwater control, and an even older system from the Civil War. Additionally, the downtown area has some well known underground areas (unaffiliated with the university) that some entrepreneur tries to develop every other decade, but fails (Arcade on main street). Might be a ton of opportunities in Columbia, so it might be worth contacting the University for more information.

(b)(6)

Sept 2, 2019, 2:54 PM

There's even some local folklore about the "lizard man" who lives in these tunnels. (More fun fiction than anything useful, though)
